The History of Parents of Plants and Seeds

The history of the parents of the plants and seed you buy is of more interest to you than the price. It costs money to protect any strain from disease and to prevent mixing with less valuable plants. We are market gardeners not nurserymen and have to sell only the surplus of the crops that have made money for us.

For fifteen years the Aroma strawberry has been grown in Warren County and Bowling Green has become famous for the quality of its berries. For ten years we have fruited about one hundred acres, setting our nursery beds each year with young vigorous plants from the most productive parts of our fields. The plants we will sell are from the same beds from which we will set our own fields.

The Aroma Irish potato, originating here from Green Mountain stock and named for our famous berry will some day make the South independent of the Northern grower and save for her thousands of dollars in freight. This potato planted in July makes a heavy yield in November and keeps in an ordinary dark cellar until the next July without sprouting, thus making it possible for the grower to keep and improve his seed from year to year. Our seed are carefully selected for size, smoothness and vigor.

Southern Kentucky is about as far north as the Nancy Hall sweet potato can be grown and retain its splendid eating qualities. Northern growers should renew their seed every few years from southern sections. Our seed are good size, smooth, bright, and free from disease.

The Gregg black cap raspberry is the best variety we have found for our warm summers. We have one small field that is six years old and still vigorous and free from disease. We ship only young, vigorous plants.
